

3rd International Aiwolf Contest Algorithm Description

CanisLupus

Abstract—Our approach is to use the parameters of the agents generated by the aiwolf generator that participated in the previous competition as a base, and search its neighborhood to find agents with higher win rates.

When searching the neighborhood of the parameters, the larger the variance among the base agents, the larger the neighborhood was searched.

Through simulated matches, we examined the best parameters for each position and combined them to create the final agent.

I. BASE AGENTS

As a base, we obtained the parameters of the following four agents.

- J0hnDoe
- cube
- Tomo
- simipu

For the parameters  $p$  used by these agents, we examined the mean  $\mu_p$  and variance  $\sigma_p$  of each.

II. NEIGHBOR SEARCH

Using a normal distribution, we generated 30 agents with random parameters  $p_n$ .

$$p_n = N(\mu_p, k\sigma_p^2)$$

, where  $k = (1 + \text{floor}(n/5))/2$ .

III. REFINING

We repeated a series of simulated matches similar to the actual game using four agents as the baseline and 30 generated agents in each of the 5-player and 15-player games. Then, for each position, we collected the parameters of the three agents that had the highest win rate.

By randomly combining these parameters, five new agents were created. After adding these agents, we repeated the simulated game again. As a result, the agent with the highest win rate was submitted as the final version.
